Jennifer Rochlin first took up ceramics as a way to expand her practice beyond the two-dimensional canvas. Trained as a painter, Rochlin creates handbuilt terra-cotta vessels that allude to ceramic traditions while embracing the medium's capacity to absorb gesture, impact, and chance. Rochlin brushes her works with loose streaks and swathes of underglazes and glazes, and often uses the sgraffito technique to inscribe her works with drawings inspired by her own experiences, popular culture, and art history. In 2020, Rochlin had solo shows at The Pit in Los Angeles, Maki Gallery in Tokyo, and Greenwich House Pottery in New York.
