Somewhere on an iceberg, Björk is jealous

November 20, 2009 | 1:51pm

Grizzly Bear, one of 2009's most brilliant audio additions, have just shared their new music video for their latest single "Ready, Able," from their even more amazing album "Veckatimest."

I have a feeling Björk is kicking herself in the þjóhnappur (Icelandic for buttocks) for not doing something like this in her collection of crazy ass videos before.

The claymation-tastic video — which looks a lot like the rocks in the Fairuza Balk-fronted "Return to Oz" movie — drops on the tails of Vampire Weekend's new release "Cousins," which we shared with you yesterday — and right now they are neck-and-neck for best video of the year. Check out the boys of Grizzly Bear below in the adventurous video, directed by Allison Schulnik.
